Manice Education Center

Program and Position Description

The Center's small student population, combined with a full time staff of nine to fifteen, provide an excellent opportunity to develop a strong, positive, multicultural community atmosphere and plenty of attention to students' individual needs. Staff, as close companions to the students under their supervision, have many opportunities to significantly influence their students' lives. For many students the experience is their first opportunity to explore and discover the wonders of the natural environment.

Responsibilities:

Instructional staff at the Manice Education Center work closely together in a supportive atmosphere teaching small, coed groups of New York City public school students in the out-of-doors. They are also responsible for overnight supervision of a maximum of six students an average of four nights per week and rotating "free time" supervision during the summer.

Interns, paired with field teachers, teach activity groups of up to twelve students in ecology, wilderness skills and group leadership skills. Together, all teaching staff facilitate debates, science labs, cooperative games and campfires for groups of up to forty students, our maximum capacity.

Summer courses include wilderness canoe/backpack expeditions of three to seven days in length. Each expedition is co-led by intern/field teacher pairs with an upper level high school student serving as a trip assistant. Staff, on average, spend twenty days out on a total of five trips per summer.

Training:

All staff members participate in a week of training before each of the three program seasons, both as active learners and presenters. These training weeks provide plenty of hands on experiences in the field and a thorough review of the Center's goals, philosophy and policies. Group management, outdoor teaching techniques and safety procedures are taught in addition a review of environmental science and wilderness skills programming.

Natural Resources:

The Manice Center, located on 83 acres at nearly 2,000 feet of elevation, borders on protected state forest lands. Second growth forest (deciduous and coniferous), fields and wetlands (spring fed pond, streams and marsh) are prominent features on the property. The surrounding state forests contain an 80-foot waterfall, four ponds, a bog, many 2,500 foot peaks and more than 25,000 forested acres, all within a day's walk.

The resource library contains more than 300 volumes, mostly field guides and outdoor activity source books plus loads of staff developed curriculum and teaching aids.

Support:

Non-instructional program staff include two wilderness program coordinators, assistant director, director all of whom live on site. Additionally, two adults from each school chaperone class field trips in the spring and fall.

Schedule:

Students are in residence five days and four nights per week during the spring and fall and for six to nineteen day courses in the summer. All personnel dine together; with meals provided during residence periods served family style to tables of up to eight staff and students.
